SMALL ARMS STORAGE
U.S. COAST GUARD YARD
CURTIS BAY
Public (Restricted)

Building No. 72, Small Arms Storage, was erected in 1937 at the Coast Guard Yard at Curtis Bay as an adjunct to the armory uses of Building No. 70. It is a small (approximately 29 x 20 feet) structure of steel and concrete veneered with brick, and consists of two storage rooms for weapons and explosives containment. Its presence on the Yard is significant in that it reflects the function of the Yard during war times as a national defense facility.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

A group of five administrative and personnel support buildings were built on the Yard between 1935-1942 as part of a modernization effort prior to World War II. Four of the buildings are steel and concrete constructions with brick veneer executed in traditional styles favored during those years for government buildings. The fifth and earliest of the group is a small frame cottage used as officers' residence until its conversion to educational uses. These buildings are:

No. 7 DESCRIPTION (continued)

Erected in 1937, Building No. 72, Small Arms Storage, is a support structure to the functions of No. 70. It is a small steel-framed concrete structure, approximately 10 x 15 feet, with brick veneer executed in common bond, with flat roof and cement slab floor. The entrance is on the north facade, which is 5 bays wide. At ground level, the tall cement basement extends northward 6 feet to form a loading dock, elevated from the ground by flights of cement steps running parallel to the front facade at both east and west ends. A cement slab overhang protects the loading dock. In the center bay are double metal doors with metal bolts. The side bays contain no windows, but have two slightly recessed (about one half inch) rectangular niches flanking each side of the doorway. Slightly projecting buttresses, also of brick with cement caps, delineate the ends of the facade. The east, west, and south facades are also windowless, with the same ornamental niches as on the front facade, 5 on the south wall and 3 each on the east and west walls. Cement capped buttresses mark the ends of the facades. Grid-like openings in the brickwork at the tops of all four facades allow for interior ventilation.
